Foreword

In a populous nation like ours, with an ever increasing need for healthcare infrastructure and services, the private sector has remained the lynchpin of growth, accounting for more than half of the total healthcare spending in the country.

Against a backdrop of changing demographics and socio economic mix in the Indian population, it is imperative to raise the bar on quality of healthcare service delivery and ensure equitable and affordable access across social strata. Achieving this requires several factors to come together, not least the optimal utilization of existing healthcare resources and the role the government needs to play in the holistic development of healthcare system.

We attempt to bring out the current state of affairs in the healthcare delivery space, recent trends in the sector and challenges in executing an effective healthcare agenda, with recommendations and actions for transforming healthcare.
